New Lenox Dog Breaks In Limelight

George Osmus and his wolf-dog Patsy of New Lenox are on the way to fame as the result of the many writeups this dog has had in various daily papers of late.

The reason why this dog has been receiving so much publicity is because it is doing something no other dog does. That is digging a hole in the ground the same as timber wolves do. The dog has dug a hole about five feet long in the yard adjoining Mr. Osmus's tavern and crawls in the hole same as a wolf does. Mr. Osmus has had the dog about two months and says Patsy is part wolf which apparently accounts for his harking back to the call of the wild. The dog is kept in a wire enclosed yard in the day time and at night sleeps in the tavern.

Mr. Osmus says the dog's former owner bought him in Chicago and that pedigree papers can be secured for the dog. Patsy has placed both Mr. Osmus and New Lenox on the map.

New Lenox School In Good Shape

The New Lenox school has been held up as model school running on a good cash basis by some of the Cook County schools who are in dire distress. The New Lenox school board has been able to pay the four teachers up to date and also have money on hand to pay on the bond issue of the school.

The reason for the good financial condition is said to be largely due to the fact that there are five railroads, a pole yard and pipe line operating in New Lenox township, all of whom are heavy tax payers.

HENRY BOLDT BADLY HURT IN AUTO CRASH

Henry Boldt, well known decorator and sign painter of Tinley Park was quite painfully injured when the car he was driving was hit head on by a Joliet fruit truck during the heavy fog Tuesday afternoon.

The accident occurred on 159th street between Crawford and Cicero avenues. Mr. Boldt was driving west. A Ford with three women in it was going east when the driver of the truck also going east, attempted to pass the Ford on a curve and due to the fog failed to see Mr. Boldt's car although both machines had their head lights burning.

In the resultant crash, Mr. Boldt sustained bad cuts about the face, one cut just missing the temple. He also suffered cut in one of the main arteries and also a wrenched knee.

He was taken to the Oak Forest Infirmary by the three women in the Ford where he was given first aid. Gordon Adler notified Mrs. Boldt of the accident and she had Mr. Boldt brought to his home in Tinley Park. He has been under the care of Dr. Vloedman of Blue Island since.

Mr. Boldt's car was so badly damaged that it's beyond repair. English Brothers of Tinley Park towed the car to their garage.

Clerk of Frankfort M. W. A. Camp Robbed of $50

Mrs. Frank J. Kohlhaugen of Frankfort was much surprised on arising Wednesday morning to find the door of the kitchen wide open. Investigation disclosed that burglars had gained entrance thru an open bath room window and when they had finished ransacking the place they unlocked the kitchen and went out.

Mr. Kohlhaugen who is the M. W. A. clerk at Frankfort had collected dues the day before and had $50.00 in cash in his trouser pockets. The trousers had been left in a room adjoining the bedroom. The robbers rifled the pockets and took the $50 and a gold watch and chain. A purse belonging to Mrs. Kohlhaugen was taken from a china closet but yielded only a small amount. Silverware had been taken out of drawers but was discarded.

A sweater had been used as a mat and was covered with mud.

Mr. and Mrs. Kohlhaugen failed to hear the robbers and did not know of their visitors until Wednesday morning.

It is thought the burglars are of the same gang which has been committing petty thefts and attempted extortions in the Frankfort-Mokena territory of late.

Tinley Legion Post To Put On Benefit Amateur Program

The American Legion of Tinley Park who have taken such active interest in the Tinley school situation are now planning another activity to help in the present crisis.

Under the direction of L. N. Stoltenberg the Post is going in the very near future put on an Amateur Night program, that bids fair to exceed anything ever tried before in a community of the size of Tinley Park. All the amateur talent in every line that can be brought together, which is of sufficient quality will be put on the program. A more complete idea of what the show will be will be found in these columns from time to time. The musical part of the program will be under the supervision of Mr. Fred Erickson.

Any person or groups of persons who would like to take part in this affair can make arrangements with Mr. Stoltenberg by addressing him at Tinley Park, Ill., or by phoning him at Tinley Park 17-R. Every organization or individual who feels they would like to take part should accept this as an invitation to participate as in the short time left it will be impossible to personally contact each individual.

Citizens Committee Announces Reopening of Tinley Park School

After a hard fight by the public spirited citizens and organizations of Tinley Park to keep the Tinley Park public school open, the Citizens Committee which has been co-operating with the school board in the school emergency, announces the re-opening of the school will take place Monday, January 14th. The official announcement as issued by the Citizens committee is as follows:

As you have doubtless heard, arrangements have been made for the re-opening of the school Monday, January 14th. This has been made possible by the cooperation of the teachers and the janitor and we feel deeply indebted to them for their support at this time.

Even with the fullest cooperation of the school staff the committee feels that we should raise a minimum of $500 to meet the necessary expenses to keep the school open for one month. Reliable information indicates that the emergency will not last more than one month; after that there will be either new legislation or sufficient money from current taxes to enable the school board to carry on as before.

After much consideration the committee decided against asking for personal subscriptions to keep the school open, but decided instead to ask every organization in town, who would care to cooperate to run some money making affair under their own name and contribute the proceeds to this fund. This money is to be an outright gift for the benefit of the school and will not be returned.

If the necessary legislation is passed at Springfield the school board will at some future time when possible, make up to the teachers and the janitor the balance of their salary for this month; if not, they have agreed that what we give them is all they are to receive for this month's work.

The committee suggests that any organization wishing to cooperate, get in touch with the committee at once to avoid conflicting dates. The American Legion is sponsoring a dance Friday night, Jan. 12th in the school auditorium; the proceeds are to be turned over to this fund. The American Legion Auxiliary has volunteered to give a card and bunco party Wednesday evening Jan. 16th in the school auditorium for the benefit of this fund.

Since this is only for this emergency and the time is limited it may not permit each organization that is willing to run individual affairs and we therefore suggest that it might be wise for two or more organizations to get together and have one big affair a week rather than several small ones.

Although we do not expect to solicit individuals, we feel there might be some people who would like to give a personal contribution. If any one wishes to give direct to this fund, any member of the committee is empowered to accept such gift. Any money raised for this cause should be given to the Treasurer of this Committee as soon as possible. Please advise the Committee at the earliest possible date of any plans.

Money Available for Wolf Road Paving

Supervisor Fred Francis of New Lenox township has been receiving letters from so-called nature lovers protesting the routing of the Wolf road thru the Cleveland woods. R. G. Strong of the Lyola University was among those protesting and he used the same old story about the wanton destruction of wild flowers, trees, etc., and then said that he had learned that Mr. Francis was standing in the way of the route going anywhere else.

Nothing could be farther from the truth. Mr. Francis is not saying where the route should go, but he is willing to have it go where the majority of the people of the community wish it to go.

If Mr. Strong and all those other nature lovers who are howling so loudly against Wolf road being located on a straight line thru the Cleveland farm are sincere, why were they not on the job when the state built Route 51 thru the Palos Park forest preserve and cut down many age old trees and many wild flowers to make way for route 51.

Money for completing the paving of Wolf road is now available and Mr. Francis advises that the contract for paving Wolf road to the Lincoln Highway could be let tomorrow if the injunction case were out of the way.

It is also understood that the state would consider building a grade separation for the Wolf road and Lincoln Highway if Wolf road is paved to the Lincoln Highway.

The injunction case concerning Wolf road was to have come up on January 16th but had to be postponed again on account of Attorney Wm. D. Heise being called east on legal matters.

Attorney Albert Krusemark who is representing Will County in the injunction case says he is seeking to have the case set for an early date.

If the Wolf road is paved to the Lincoln highway, Federal aid could most likely be secured to carry on the paving south to route 51.

Want to Collect Taxes Year Round

The bills prepared by the Suburban Area and Country Towns Association to enable the Township Collectors to receive taxes all year round, and to empower Assessors to make assessments, will soon be ready in final form.

ILLINOIS State News

A report from the Illinois commerce commission setting forth the commission's activities in 1934 was transmitted to Gov. Henry Horner by Chairman Benjamin F. Lindheimer. Among other things, Chairman Lindheimer makes the claim that the year's total savings to utility rate payers, resulting from the commission's orders, totaled $5,873,754. These orders in the main involved reduction in gas, electric, telephone, and transportation rates. These savings, the document asserts in all likelihood will continue through 1935. The commission claims that of the total of downward revisions, only $268,437 represented reductions voluntarily agreed to by some utilities in informal conferences called by the commission. Some of the existing reductions are experimental, and may be made permanent in the coming year. One large experimental order of this type is the electric rate revision ruling against the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois. This order is said to have netted to the domestic users of the utility annual savings of $1,300,000. The document asks for an appropriation for expenses. It says that for the next biennial period it will need $1,350,000. In summary, the report recommends legislation (1) to give the commission broader power over depreciation allowances and reserves of utilities, (2) to permit investigation expenses charged against utilities to be put into a revolving fund for use in further inquiries, and (3) to enlarge the commission's authority to authorize experimental rate and service orders.

Governor Horner sent out invitations for the second annual conference of law enforcement officials of Illinois. A thousand sheriffs, states' attorneys, mayors, and police chiefs are to meet in Springfield, Saturday, January 5. Co-operating in the conference, the governor announced, will be representatives of federal law enforcing agencies and Attorney General Otto Kernner's office; T. P. Sullivan, head of the bureau of criminal identification and investigation, and L. M. Taylor, acting chief of the highway police. The Illinois conference will recommend that suggestions of the national meeting be incorporated into new legislation for submission to the forthcoming session of the general assembly. Among the suggestions were provisions for the registration of firearms, the filing of direct information against defendants in felony cases, and changes in the Illinois jury system to permit convictions, in all except capital offense cases, by a 10 to 2 vote. Governor Horner said that recent disclosures of organized and widespread dope rings, would also receive attention at the conference.

The Illinois farm home of Abraham Lincoln in Coles county is to be restored and made into a state park under a plan which has been worked out by Robert Kingery, director of the state department of public works and buildings. The farm, which is located off a township road near Charleston, consists of 84 acres, which have been purchased by the state. It was once owned by Lincoln's parents, and the living quarters, consisting of a two-room log cabin, are to be completely restored and refurnished as they were in Lincoln's day. "We will ask the next general assembly to approve an appropriation of $20,000 with which to finance the project," said Kingery. "We will rebuild the place as it existed in Lincoln's youth, even supplying household utensils." It is planned to build a custodian's house and a parking space for automobiles near the entrance to the farm.

D. M. Zachary, special agent for the Chicago and Illinois Midland railroad, was shot and critically wounded in Springfield by a man he had arrested for stealing coal. His assailant escaped. A companion, Guy Harris, was captured. The Midland train on which Zachary was riding as a guard had halted on the Illinois Central railroad tracks because of the wreckage of eight Illinois Central coal cars dynamited a short time ago. Zachary and another guard seized two men who were loading coal into a truck. When the motor backfired several times the other guard got out and found Zachary in the back of the truck, shot in the abdomen, with his prisoner gone.

A major epidemic wave of measles appears to be gathering momentum in Illinois with the outlook that prevalence will reach unusual magnitude by February or March, according to a statement issued by Dr. Frank J. Jirka, director of the state department of public health.

Curtis S. Bill, forty-four, political and city affairs reporter for the Bloomington Daily Pantagraph, died of a heart attack.

With the firing of Emil Ceisler, proprietor of the Capitol Food Market in Springfield, on a charge of violating the retailers' occupation tax law, state department of finance officials asserted they had uncovered a new "racket" in sales tax evasion. Ceisler, who pleaded guilty in county court to failure to file returns and keep books, was revealed as having been victimized by an organization which solicited memberships among merchants at a annual fee of $15, in return for which the members were assured that they would not have to pay the state sales tax.

They Grew Them in Alaskan Waters

WHEN the United States coast guard cutter Northland returned the other day to Oakland, Calif., after seven months in Alaskan waters, the wives, sisters and sweethearts of members of the crew had some difficulty in recognizing their men, for all of them wore luxurious beards. The cutter was on its annual medical cruise among the Eskimos and seemingly carried no razors, though nearly every kind of surgical instrument was in its equipment. It gave medical and dental aid to 2,000 Eskimos in various ports, and also put ashore a force to help in the rehabilitation of Nome after the big fire.

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

PETER LEARNS SOMETHING ABOUT SEEP SEEP

"HELLO! There's Seep Seep! I haven't seen him since we were together up north, where his home was not far from mine," exclaimed Yank Yank the Nuthatch.

As he spoke a little brown bird alighted at the foot of the very next tree. He was just a trifle bigger than Jenny Wren but not at all like Jenny, for while Jenny's tail usually is cocked up in the sauciest way, Seep Seep's tail is never cocked up at all. In fact, it bends down, for Seep Seep uses his tail in climbing just as the members of the Woodpecker family use theirs. He was dressed in grayish-brown above and grayish-white beneath. Across each wing was a little band of buffy-white and his bill was curved down just a little.

When he alighted at the foot of that tree, Seep Seep didn't stop an instant but started up, going round and round it as he climbed and picking out things to eat under the bark. His way of climbing that tree was very like creeping and Peter thought that Seep Seep was well named the Brown Creeper. He would have liked to gossip with Seep Seep, but he knew that Seep Seep would waste no time that way.

Round and round up the trunk of that tree went Seep Seep and, when he reached the top, at once flew down to the bottom of the next tree and without a pause, started up that. He wasted no time exploring the branches, but kept to the trunk. Once in a while he would cry in a thin little wiry voice, "Seep! Seep!" but never paused to rest or look around. If he had felt that on him alone depended the job of getting all the insect eggs and grubs on those trees, he could not have been more industrious.

"Does he build his nest in a hole in a tree?" asked Peter of Yank Yank the Nuthatch.

Yank Yank shook his head. "No," he replied. "He hunts for a tree or an old stub with a piece of loose bark hanging to it. In behind this he tucks his nest made of twigs, strips of bark and moss. He's a funny little fellow and I don't know of anyone in all the Great World who more strictly attends to his own business than does Seep Seep the Brown Creeper. He's little but he is mighty useful. Farmer Brown ought to be glad every time he sees him. By the way, Peter, have you seen anything of Dotty the Tree Sparrow?"

"Not yet," replied Peter, "but I think he must be here. I'm glad you reminded me of him. I'll go look for him."

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

WINTRY SUGGESTIONS

NOW is the season, while citrus fruits are plentiful, to prepare marmalades. As tastes differ as to bitterness in the marmalade, one has to be guided as to the amount of the rind used in the mixture. For those who like a mild and still flavorful marmalade use one each of lemon, orange and grapefruit.

Apple Salad.

One of the most satisfactory salads for winter is the one of apples—small-sized Baldwins, or any good apple; peel carefully after coring and use apples of uniform size. Cook in sugar sirup with a small handful of the little cinnamon candies, which add flavor as well as color. When cool serve on lettuce stuffed with cream or cottage cheese and garnish the top with a sprig of parsley.

Grapefruit and Almond Salad.

Cut the pulp of two grapefruit into dice, add two ounces of blanched and chopped almonds to the drained pulp.

Dissolve one package of lemon gelatin with boiling water and the juice from the fruit to make two cupsful, using one cupful of grapefruit juice and one of water. When the mixture begins to thicken add the almonds and a tablespoonful of sugar. Pour into a mold and set away to harden. Serve with mayonnaise as a salad or with whipped cream as a dessert.

Casserole of Cauliflower.

Soak a head of cauliflower in salt water for half an hour, head down, so if there are any insects lodged in it they will come out. Break into sprigs of flowerets and cook in very little boiling water 20 minutes. Take one and one-half cupsful of cooked macaroni, one and one-half cupsful of strained tomatoes, one-half cupful of grated cheese, salt, pepper and buttered cracker crumbs. Add the cheese to the tomatoes and cook until the cheese is melted. Season with salt and pepper and pour over the layers of cauliflower and macaroni. Cover with buttered crumbs and bake about 20 minutes. Serve hot.

I have been in ten drug stores but have been unable to get any bunion plasters. The druggists all say they wouldn't have them in the place. Can you tell me why?

MY BOY COMES HOME

By ANNE CAMPBELL

I THINK I know what heaven is like now—

A little yard where grass is growing green;

A robin chirping on an apple bough,
As from the fence the crimson roses lean.

It is late afternoon, and suddenly
I hear the gate click . . . the familiar sound

Of youthful footsteps coming close to me.

A shadow throws its length across the ground.

I think I know what heaven is—the strong

Young arms that I have waited for in vain;

An eager voice that I have missed too long,

And heaven breaks! My boy is home again!

CANADIAN STONEHENGE

Indications of similarity in primitive religious cults have been discovered in every continent, and it is now accepted that what is called the New world contains some of the world's most ancient relics of dead civilizations. A recent archeological find is reported from Canada. A museum curator was on a canoe trip with a friend in the Whitesheet forest preserve 100 miles east of Winnipeg, when they stumbled on a sacred area which they compare with Stonehenge. They found a number of large upright stones and monuments in weird formation, covering an area of several acres, which are thought to have been erected by members of a snake cult of Cree or Chipewyan Indians many centuries ago.—London Tit-Bits.

Little Girl's Face Inflamed by Psoriasis

Healed by Cuticura

"My little girl's face was so inflamed that her eyes were swollen almost shut. The trouble was diagnosed as psoriasis. She scratched night and day and was not able to obtain rest. The scratching aggravated the trouble and each finger tip was red and swollen with infection. She became so emaciated that she was very pathetic looking.

"After three months' suffering I recalled the Cuticura treatment used by my mother. I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment and used them according to directions. The first treatment brought relief and she is now healed." (Signed) Mrs. Marie I. Johnson, 4720 Ames Ave., Omaha, Neb., March 14, 1934.

SYNOPSIS

Prudence Schuyler comes to Prosperity Farm to make a new life for herself and her brother, David, his health broken by tragedy. The second day Prue falls from the barn loft into the arms of Rodney Gerard, rich young man, a neighbor. There is at once a mutual attraction, but Prudence suspects men since her sister's husband ran away with her brother's wife, Len Calloway tries to buy Prue's timber, but she contracts with Rod to dispose of the trees. David comes to the farm. Prue accompanies Rod and Jean, Rod's thirteen-year-old niece, to a circus. Chitot, an old clown, is accidentally killed. He was the grandfather of Milly Gooch, one of the circus riders. Rod became friendly with Milly when she lived on Prosperity Farm. Calloway intimidates laborers so that they cannot be hired to cut the timber for Rodney Gerard. After Chitot's death Rod calls on Milly to see if he can be of any help. Prue sees in a newspaper a flashlight picture of him with Milly. Rodney goes to New York for timber cutters, taking David with him to help select men from among the Rescue Mission hangers-on. Rod sends word of his coming, with a crew of laborers. To keep the knowledge of the workers' arrival from Calloway, Prudence enters her timber tract with him on the pretense of bargaining on the lumbering. He confines her in a cabin. An escaped convict appears and robs Prudence of her pearls. Then Rod arrives and holds a gun on Calloway and the convict, recovering the jewels. Escorting Prue home, Gerard assumes something of a domineering attitude, which the girl resents, and in a spirit of defiance she tells him she is engaged to Jim Armstrong, Rodney's closest friend. Twenty-five men are brought to the forest and put to work.

"Sure, an' ye're sayin' little about the chance ye took," he growled.

"Three cheers for the Big Boss!" someone shouted.

In the midst of the deafening response Prue started down the trail to her car parked on the road. Body and mind were in a tumult. When Rodney Gerard had flung himself under that falling tree, the world had stopped for her. Nothing, nothing mattered if he were safe, she had vowed passionately.

As she stepped from the car, Jean flung herself upon her.

"Oh, Miss Prue! Miss Prue! I'm so glad you've come!" Her breath caught in a sob. "I've got something cagy to tell you!"

Prue laid an arm across the fur-covered shoulders.

"Don't get jittery, dear. Come into the house and tell me about it."

Jean closed both doors. "Can anyone hear?"

Impatient at her temperamental response to Jean's histrionics, Prudence shook her head vigorously.

"All righty. Come over by the mantel."

Standing close, she whispered:

"Len Calloway's got something up his sleeve."

The information coincided so exactly with what Prudence had been suspecting that her response was immediate.

"I thought so. What have you found out? Quick! Tell me!"

"About an hour ago I was looking round the gun room at home—I had a hunch that I might find your jewels there—I thought—well, I thought perhaps I might—I might have walked in my sleep when I was visiting you—you know I was nuts about them—and have taken them—not knowing it—understand?"

Prudence nodded. She understood perfectly. Loyal little soul. Jean drew a long, relieved sigh.

"You would. I was poking round when I heard someone coming. I was scared! My father uses that room. I knew he'd be mad if he found me there, so I slipped behind one of the window hangings. He opened the door softly. Said to someone:

"Come in!"

"My heart was pounding as if its engine was running on high. Two people! I thought, 'I'll never get out.' My father growled:

"Come across, Calloway. What's on your mind now?"

"What did Calloway want?"

"I don't know. I remembered that I'd promised you that I wouldn't pry, so I stuck my fingers in my ears hard."

If only the child hadn't taken that vital moment to keep her promise, Prudence wished fervently.

"Go on, Jean. You must have heard something."

"Sure, I heard something. After I'd kept my fingers in my ears for—it seemed hours, I pulled them out. I heard Mr. Calloway say:

"I'm going."

"He didn't see you, did he?"

"Gee, you're pinching!" Jean rubbed her shoulder as Prudence quickly removed her hand. "Guess you're as excited as I am. Mr. Calloway didn't come to the window. His voice sounded as if he was at the door, for he said quite loud:

"Tonight at the old smithy. Eight. Report there. Safer than here. Too many doors and windows in this house."

"When he said that I almost died, but I was live enough to hear my father say:

"It's a payment on delivery proposition, Len? Sure?"

"Sure. Ever know me to break my word? I may be a hard man, but I'm just. Milly Gooch is at the Puffers. I suppose she's come to see Rod."

"Milly—"

"That was all I heard Father say, for the door closed. I waited till I was sure they were gone. Then I sneaked out and made Patch drive me over here."

Prudence crossed to the window. So—Milly Gooch had arrived on the scene. Now what would happen? She thrust the thought of the circus rider into the back of her mind and said without turning:

"Repeat what Calloway said about meeting your father, Jean."

"Tonight at the old smithy. Eight."

"Eight o'clock? Are you sure?"

"Yep."

"Where's the smithy?"

"He meant the old blacksmith shop."

When Grandfather ran a big farm he had the horses shod there. Uncle Rod keeps it in repair because he thinks it's interesting."

"Perhaps Mr. Calloway has engaged your father to boss a lumber crew for him."

"Payment on delivery doesn't sound like that kind of a job. Father boss a crew? Don't be dumb! It's something else. You don't think it's anything that will hurt Uncle Rod, do you, Miss Prue?"

"Of course not. Perhaps they are planning a party for—"

behind that large pine, or was it a ghostly illusion?

"Don't be foolish," she scolded herself. "Everyone you know is too busy with his own affairs to be stalking you."

She proceeded cautiously. The clasp of a ski snapped open, the leather binding slipped from her heel.

"Damn!" she muttered, and readjusted the ski. Upright, she rested on her poles until she could collect her breath. A little afraid? What was there to fear now that the convict was behind bars? Didn't every minute count? She looked over her shoulder. She had shaken off that skulking shadow. Of course, it had been but a creature of her always superactive imagination. Just the same, she was glad to have left it behind.

She stopped on a little shelf of level land on the hillside. Was that shadowy blotch the blacksmith shop?

Her heart caught and raced on. Was she becoming infected with fright? She wouldn't turn back now. Time was flying. Calloway and Walter Gerard might reach the smithy first. Then where would she be? She couldn't see herself listening at cracks and windows. She must get inside before they came.

She frowned at the slope which, until it neared the road, was almost clear of trees. White. Hard. Dry. A jump would save time. Dare she try it? She had been good once. Why not? It was a short jump. Suppose she flopped? What was one flop in the day's work?

She dropped her poles, skied back on the level, rounded up all the instructions she could remember.

She turned. Raced forward. She was in the air! She landed. Was she going over? No. She clasped her hands behind her. Not too bad when she had been so long without practice. Steady on her skis again. They barely etched the hard surface. She was going like a thousand race horses merged in one.

The smithy! Not so far away as she had thought. Straight ahead. She would crash into it. She must stop! How did one stop? She had forgotten. She would drop.

Stars rained in a golden shower. The world rocked. She opened her eyes. That crash ought to have broken every bone in her body, she reflected, as she rolled over on her side. She pulled herself to one knee, floundered upright on her skis.

The blacksmith shop was barely two feet away. Its one window stared at her like a lidless eye. No light! That meant that she was the first arrival at the "conference."

In a pool of purple shadow at the foot of a giant spruce, she removed her skis cautiously and rested them against the tree. No sound but the whispers among the dark green boughs and the chime of fairy ice bells. No shadow could stalk her down that slide. She had better get under cover.

She tiptoed to the shop.

Soundlessly she pressed her fingers against the door. Noiselessly it swung in. Too easy. She peered into the dim interior. Swallowed the lump in her throat.

"Anyone h-here?" she inquired softly.

Quiet as a tomb and cold as death. Cheery comparison! She stepped over the threshold and closed the door, crossed the floor, which broadcast a creak with every cautious step, and appraised the narrow space between forge and wall. Should she slip in there? No. Too near the conspirators. Did that opening at the left lead into a shed?

The glow of her flashlight illumined the corners of a lean-to. That high pile of firewood would serve as a screen if either of the conspirators felt moved to investigate. She pulled off her mittens, glanced at the illuminated dial of her wrist watch. Five minutes before eight.

She leaned against the door frame. Why didn't the men come? How long should she wait? It would take longer to go back than it had to come. If she weren't at home by nine-thirty, when the movies were out, David would be wild with anxiety.

Crunch! Crunch!

Someone coming! This time her heart refused to be swallowed; it parked in her throat and thumped deafeningly. Calloway or Walter Gerard? As a companion in a lonely shack there wasn't much choice between them. Of course, the fiery Len was a "just man."

A light! It flickered. She crouched behind the wood pile. A door closing? The sound as of a lantern set down. The lean-to doorway framed a soft glow. The door again!

"I beat you to it, Calloway."

That was Walter Gerard's silky, assured voice.

"Come across with the money, Len."

"How do I know you've done the trick, Walt?"

"If you don't believe me, go and look at the truck. It laid down and died almost at the door of the cattle barn. Neatest trick of the week."

"What time did it crack-up?"

"Didn't you set the time? Just as the crew had finished supper. They got the full effect of the crash. I hung around for a few minutes to make sure they were on; then I beat it. No chance of a flop now, the cart's backed up, you win. Don't stall, Calloway, come across with the money you promised when you wrote asking me to come to High Ledges to do a little work for you. Cash on delivery, remember—but, of course, you won't stall, you're such an honest man."

There was sardonic mirth in Walter Gerard's voice and a hint of hatred.

"Oh, all right. I'll pay. Here's your money."

Prudence crept on hands and knees to the doorway. She must watch the passing of that money. Someone would pay for the destruction of the truck belonging to the firm of Schuyler and Gerard, and it wouldn't be either of the partners.

Crouched in the dusk, she watched the two men standing within the radius of light from an oil lantern on the forge. A knitted cap was pulled low over Calloway's ears. Facing him, Walter Gerard counted the bills in hand.

"Okay. Now I'll light out. I'm not going back to the house. I'll catch a ride—"

A tap on the window! Another tap!

"Put out that light!"

The harsh whisper was Walter Gerard's. The shop went dark. Prudence tiptoed to the wood pile. She misjudged the distance, struck it. With sickening moderation and rumble the sticks began to slide.

She held her breath. Now what would happen? Someone was breathing hard at the lean-to opening.

"Find out who's at that window, Walt." It was Calloway's hoarse low voice; she couldn't mistake it. "I'll take care of the snooper hiding in here."

CHAPTER XI

Dusk in the living room at High Ledges. A glowing fire on the hearth. A vague sense of tension in the air. A coffee table with empty Sevres cups. Jean in a gay little frock behind it. Jim Armstrong sprawled in a big chair. David Schuyler, chin in cupped hands, frowning at space. Two black field spaniels prone on the rug. Rodney Gerard, arm on the mantel, staring at the licking flames.

"I know as well as I know that I'm standing here that someone is working on the crew," said Gerard. "That's why I persuaded you to stay for dinner, Dave. Wanted to talk it over. Two of my men slacked today. They were surly when I asked why. Said they had a pain. 'Something they'd eat, they guessed.' Have either of you noticed anything to make you uneasy, or am I having a bad case of the jitters? What do you think, Jim?"

Armstrong rose precipitately to knock his pipe against an andiron. "I agree with you, Rod. Something is working on the crew. Via the grapevine route. In fact I'm so uneasy that I'm going back to my cabin now."

Rodney Gerard threw his cigarette into the fire. "I'm going with you."

David Schuyler rose. "I haven't seen the inside of the cattle barn since it was made into a bunk-house. I'll drop in on my boys."

Armstrong stopped on his way to the door. "Better not tonight. I may be having the heebie-jeebies, but I have a hunch we'll find things in a mess."

"All the more reason I should go. I—"

"What's the matter, K. K.?"

Rodney Gerard's sharp question focussed attention on Jean, who was standing in the geographical center of the room twisting the gayly printed crepe of her skirt between nervous fingers. Her brow was as furrowed as a thirteen-year-old brow may be. Her eyes seemed enormous as she looked at Gerard.

Clean Spark Plugs Will

Insure Best Performance

Motorists who get the best performance from their automobile are the ones who give proper attention to the cleaning and readjusting of the spark plugs among other important details.

This observation was made by a prominent engineer, who has given much study to economical operation of automobiles.

A spark plug, he says, fires more than 5,000,000 times during every 3,500 miles of car operation. The spark plug firing points, therefore, must be kept at proper adjustment.

If they are not the engine will miss. This means uneven engine performance although the driver may not be aware of it. On the other hand, a coating from the combustion gases forms on spark plug insulators usually after 3,500 miles of operation, which also causes missing and a waste of one out of every ten gallons of gasoline.

It is quite natural that the motorist who twice a year has his spark plugs cleaned and adjusted gets more miles per gallon of gasoline; gets better car performance; and reduces repair expense to a minimum.

PETER'S GREAT CONFESSION

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 16:13-23; I Peter 2:5, 6.

GOLDEN TEXT—And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.—Matthew 16:16.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How Peter Pleased Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter's Great Answer.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What It Means to Confess Christ.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What Think Ye of Christ?

The disciples had been with the Lord for several years. They had heard his wonderful words and witnessed his mighty works. Various opinions were extant about him. Since Jesus was soon to go to the cross, it was necessary for the disciples to have a definite and true conception of him. In order to help them into the right conception he provoked this confession from Peter, as the spokesman of the group of disciples.

I. Peter's Confession (vv. 13-16).

1. How provoked (v. 13). Two questions put to the disciples called forth this great confession.

a. Who do men say that the Son of Man is? (v. 13). He first inquired for the opinion of the people concerning him. It is not enough to think that he was a great teacher. Had he been content with this, he would not have been molested at Jerusalem, for this the Jews willingly acknowledged. It was his persistent claim to be the God-Man, the Messiah, the Son of God, that sent him to the cross.

b. Who say ye that I am? (v. 15). This question involved the personal opinion of the disciples. To be able to tell what others think of Jesus is not enough; there must be definite, correct, and personal belief in him. Belief and character are inseparably united.

2. What Peter's confession involved (v. 16). It was his Messiahship and Deity. The burning question of the hour is, "What think ye of Christ?" It is a question that must be answered by every one.

3. Christ's commendation of Peter (v. 17). He pronounced him blessed. He was truly blessed, for he both possessed and confessed Christ. His confession showed his touch with the Heavenly Father.

II. The New Body, the Church, Announced by Christ (vv. 18-20).

At this juncture Christ declared his intention of bringing into existence a new body. Peter was to have a distinguished place in this body. He declared that Peter should be a foundation stone in his Church. Christ is the chief corner stone upon which the Church is built. Christ's person and Messiahship were confessed by Peter, and on this rock, the truth confessed, is laid the foundation of the apostles and prophets (Eph. 2:20). He further declared that association in this new body could not be broken by death, for the gates of Hades should not prevail against it.

III. The Cross the Way to the Throne (vv. 21-23).

From that time Jesus began to show unto his disciples that he must go unto Jerusalem, to suffer many things, to be killed and raised again the third day. This, indeed, startled the disciples. They did not as yet realize that redemption was to be accomplished through the sufferings of the cross. So unwelcome was this announcement that Peter said, "This shall not be unto thee." Peter later saw through this darkness to the glory of the hill tops. A new hope then filled his breast (I Pet. 1:3, 4). Christ's victory through death is yet a stumbling block to many. Many are stumbling over the doctrine of salvation through the sufferings of the cross. Salvation by blood is hated by the devil.

IV. The Grand Objective of the Members of the Church (I Pet. 2:5, 6).

It is the highest ambition of every Christian to become a working part of Christ's glorious Church, which has as its supreme design the showing forth of the glory of God. It is this that beckons the believer on to the highest and best in life. No higher motive can actuate anyone than to make manifest the glory of God. The Church, God's spiritual house, has the living Christ as its chief corner stone and head. Because of their relationship to him, the believers are living stones, deriving their preciousness from him. While the world saw no beauty or comeliness in Christ, God esteemed him precious and esteems every believer precious because of his vital union with Christ.

Belief in Christ

The condition of salvation is that kind of belief in Jesus Christ which authenticates itself in repentance for the past and an amendment of life for the future.—L. L. Noble.

The Soul's Aspirations

The immortality of this life makes men yearn for a better country. The soul of man, the mark of the Creator upon his creature, should make him long for that heavenly city. The soul is too big to be satisfied away from God.

Believe in Yourself Too

Soberly and with clear eyes believe in your own time and place. There is not, and there never has been, a better time or a better place to live in.

Value of Kindergarten

Shown in After Years

Education is a lifelong process. The better the beginning, the better the life. Elmer Ellsworth Brown, chancellor emeritus of New York university, once said: "From the kindergarten to manhood is so long a span that it is hard for many people to realize the full significance of kindergarten training for the adult life of our people. But there are certain ways—not altogether obvious though long recognized by the friends of the kindergarten—in which this foster-parent of our child-citizenship is vitally related to our citizen-life in its entirety." And Prof. W. H. Lancelot of Iowa State college writes: "Our great mistake in the past has been to throw away in many cases the years in which the life and character of the child are most easily shaped. We now know that habit formation is at its height in the pre-school years and that this is one of the most critical stages of child life."

The child who goes to a good kindergarten usually enjoys his later school days, and whatever his adult occupation may be he still continues interested in the world about him and in the accomplishments of his fellow men, just as long as he lives. Be sure there is a class, conducted by a properly trained kindergarten, for the boys and girls of your community. If you need help write to the National Kindergarten association, 8 West Fortieth street, New York city. There is no charge for any service rendered.

The Voice of the American Legion

By The Tinley Park Post No. 615
COMMUNISM OUT FIRST

Communism is the spearhead of the movement in America to destroy America. As one of its first duties, therefore the Legion is concentrating on the destruction of this un-American doctrine in this country. Special Americanism chairmen are being appointed in every legislative district and city precinct to keep a careful check on the brand of Americanism public officials give their constituents. A survey is nearing completion on the political privileges which are granted Communist candidates in State primaries and elections. In those States which grant political rights to the Communist party, the Legion will conduct a bold, public drive to have those rights taken away, on the ground that since Communism stands for the destruction of the Constitution by force, Communism has no legal or moral status in the United States.

What is Communism?

The Legion, since its inception, has been the bitter enemy of all types of subversive and radical un-American activities in this nation. The definition of Communism must be better understood by the average Citizen in America if we are to carry on with renewed determination a program to counteract it. An educational program designed to inform the American people of the background of every subversive group in existence is vitally necessary. For example, the average Citizen knows practically nothing of the background of the "Young Pioneers" (a Youth Communist Activity), the Industrial Unions (at least forty-two Communist unions), the National Students League, the American Civil Liberties Union, and numerous others traveling under uncamouflaged nom de plumes.

Let us define this thing called Communism. We find it on Page 4 of Report 2290, 71st Congress, 3rd Session, House of Representatives. As follows:

"(1) Hatred of God and all forms of religion; (2) destruction of private property and inheritance; (3) promotion of class hatred; (4) revolutionary propaganda through the Communist International, stirring up Communist activities in foreign countries in order to cause strikes, riots, sabotage, bloodshed and Civil War; (5) destruction of all forms of representative or democratic governments, including civil liberties, such as freedom of speech, of the press, of assembly, and trial by jury; (6) the ultimate and final objective is by means of world revolution to establish a dictatorship of the so-called proletariat into one world union of soviet socialist republics with the capital at Moscow.

"Communism has also been defined as an organized effort to overthrow organized governments which operate contrary to communist plan now in effect in Russia. It aims at the socialization of government, private property, industry, labor, the home, education and religion. Its objectives are the abolition of other governments, private ownership of property, inheritance, religion and family relations.

"Webster's (1930 edition) Dictionary gives the definition of communism in part as follows:

A system of social organization in which goods are held in common—the opposite of the system of private property.

That definition tells the objectives of the communist group in America.

To carry on this important work, it is vitally important that every American Citizen, as well as every Legionnaire to submit to the Local Legion Post any and all authentic information concerning the activities of Communist or other subversive groups in their communities. When this information is received, legislation will be prepared and introduced by the Legion to curtail these un-American activities.

CAN'T BE DONE

During the national convention at Miami, Florida, an elderly lady is said to have become alarmed at the antics of the Legionnaires. Approaching a policeman, she said: "Can't you stop them, officer?"

"Lady," responded the officer sadly, "there's an old man in Europe who tried to do that, and now he's sawing wood in Holland."

Tinley Park Legion Aux. Unit

Mrs. Lester N. Stoltenberg, Publicity Chairman

The year of 1934 has been a period of strenuous activity and gratifying success for the American Legion Auxiliary, stated Mrs. A. Felton, president of the Tinley Park Unit of the Auxiliary, in summarizing the year's activity of the organization. The Auxiliary has gained in strength throughout the country and has achieved practically all points of the broad program outlined for the year, she said.

Membership losses of the past two years were ended this year and a strong membership gain made. The increased membership approximately 30,000 above last year, has brought the strength of the Auxiliary up to nearly 40,000 members. New Units formed during the year have increased the total number of local Units to more than 8,400.

The Auxiliary has continued its efforts for the welfare of the disabled World War veterans many of whom were in acute distress at the beginning of the year because of curtailment of government benefits under economy measures. It gave vigorous support to the Legion's campaign for the restoration of these benefits to justly deserving veterans helping mobilize public opinion behind the Legion's demands. Action of Congress restoring benefits to important categories of war disabled and dependents materially improved conditions for the war's victims and was a clear-cut victory for the American Legion and Auxiliary.

In addition to this work, the Auxiliary continued its program of visits and aid to hospitalized veterans and to disabled veterans outside of the hospitals. At Christmas more than 100,000 veterans in hospitals received gifts from the Auxiliary and fully 25,000 of their families were given a happy Christmas through Auxiliary efforts. Every Auxiliary member contributed ten cents to a special national rehabilitation fund, from which $25,000 was donated to the American Legion for its work for the disabled, and the balance expended in the national activities of the Auxiliary.

The memorial poppy program was carried out successfully by the Auxiliary again this year giving employment to hundreds of disabled veterans and raising hundreds of thousands of dollars for relief and rehabilitation activities. More than 8 million poppies were made by the disabled men and were distributed on Poppy Day, by volunteer workers from the Auxiliary and nearly one million dollars was received in contributions for the flowers.

In activities for the dependent children of veterans and for improvement of conditions for all needy children, the Auxiliary worked in closest co-operation with the American Legion and other organizations interested in child welfare.

This work was carried in every community where there is a Unit, aiding in the betterment of conditions affecting the physical, mental and moral development of young Americans.

Throughout the year the Auxiliary has cooperated in relief work for families in need, providing workers and supplies for relief activities in thousands of communities. In addition to their regular program, the Auxiliary women made and distributed one million glasses of 'jellies and jam to needy families.

In its continuous endeavors to better conditions of life in American communities, the Auxiliary has made aid to public libraries a major activity during 1934. They collected more than 55,000 books to fill depleted stocks, opening 134 closed libraries and established new ones. Again in 1934, the Auxiliary took the leadership among women's organizations in working for greater security for the United States through strengthened national defenses.

An important part of the Auxiliary's activities throughout the year has been its Americanism work in which it seeks to help maintain and perpetuate the ideals and principles of American democracy.

Co-operation for world peace has been given by the Auxiliary through the Women's Auxiliary of Fidae, the interallied veterans' federation. Study programs, essay contests, pageants, talks, and radio broadcasts have been sponsored as part of the work of building international understanding and good will as a basis for lasting peace.

At the Auxiliary's 1934 national convention in Miami, Fla., a strong program of activities for 1935 was adopted. Enrollment of 1935 membership has progressed so rapidly that approximately 50 percent of the Auxiliary's members have been re-enrolled in advance of the new year. The increased strength and interest being shown in all parts of the country, give indications of even greater accomplishments in 1935.

Mokena was by far the best team of the day. It started its season with a bang and the boys thank all those who came and made the game a success.

The third game went off smoothly with a lot of speed and pep. Both teams were breaking fast and there were plenty of passes. Mokena won this game 33 to 29. This game was nip and tuck throughout. Bill Muehler pulled the honors home this time, scoring 13 points. Cheney scored high for Frankfort scoring 10 points.

YOUTH NEED NOT BE QUESTION OF YEARS

GRAY haired . . . dismissed . . . too old for active service. . . But is that the whole story? Does hair that has turned gray actually indicate old age? Or is it that in most cases gray hair is just one of the many indications of a body grown old and a spirit tired out?

Prince de Leon gave his life in his effort to find a Fountain of Youth. Other men—wiser men—have found their foundations of youth within themselves. They have learned to use Nature's methods and gifts to preserve their bodies and to keep them young and to keep their minds and spirits youthful.

A few simple rules based on those that Nature herself has indicated in natural bodily functions used as a basis of right living will serve to keep one's body and spirit young.

A well balanced diet—consisting of plenty of fruit, vegetables, and fresh milk in order to get the proper amount of the vitamins so necessary to good health—at least eight hours of refreshing sleep, some out of door exercise, and attention to any body disorders arising from time to time will do much toward building up a strong resistance to disease, thereby keeping the body in good health. This will actually help preserve the youth of an individual as the effect of illness upon one's appearance is very aging.

Out of the Fountain of Youth

EXPOSURE TO SUN AFFECTS HAIR BEAUTY

MOST women are quite careful in their treatment of sunburned face and arms, but frequently neglectful of sunburned hair. Often, after a summer spent on the sun-flooded beach or tennis court, it is found that the hair has become dry, brittle, and lusterless. That is because exposure to the sun and wind has dried out some of the natural oil in the hair and scalp.

Just as creams and lotions are used to lubricate the skin some similar treatment should be given the hair to restore it to its usual beauty and resiliency. Stimulation of the hair fibres by vigorous brushing and massaging the scalp with the finger tips are good ways to bring about increased circulation.

However, for truly beautiful and lustrous hair more than outside care is needed. The hair is an alive and growing part of our physical being and requires nourishment just as do the other parts of the body. A diet which includes an adequate supply of fruits, vegetables, and fresh pasteurized milk will supply the nutritional elements necessary to the growth of beautiful hair.

Before having another permanent wave put into the hair, it is well to give it a series of oil and massage treatments and to check on the diet in order to be sure that the necessary food elements are being supplied.

Sound Health, Good Habits Basis of School Success

These children and their mother know how refreshing that pause for a glass of milk is and how much it can do toward winning bicycle races.

EVERY child who enters school this fall, whether he is a beginner in kindergarten or a senior in college, should have the advantage of good health and a thorough knowledge of health habits. These will prove among his greatest assets in his attempt to achieve success both in the classroom and on the athletic field.

With the opening of school just ahead, it is time to take stock of each child's needs. Checking his eyes, nose, throat, vaccinations, and teeth are essential parts of school preparations. Instilling the habit of correct diet and proper eating should not be overlooked because of its vital importance not only on present health, but as a means of building toward a sound foundation for the future.

Just as a plumber or an electrician, a doctor or a musician would not be expected to do his best work without proper tools and instruments, a child cannot be expected to do good school work unless he is equipped properly. And first on the list of the child's requirements comes good health. Without it he is apt to be grouchy, moody, slow, disinterested, or uninterested. Any or all of these phases of temperament are decided drawbacks to desired school accomplishments.

Correct diet, regular exercise, sufficient sleep, and personal cleanliness are the four cardinal principles of achieving and maintaining good health.

At least a quart of fresh pasteurized milk, servings of two vegetables (one green) besides potatoes, and a serving of fresh fruit should be included in each day's menu in addition to the other foods needed. Plenty of eggs, butter, whole grain cereals along with the milk, vegetables, and fruit will build strong bodies. An abundance of such foods with as little heavy, greasy or rich food as possible will keep the body regular and supplied with a store of healthy energy. They will also provide the vitamins A, B, C, and G so necessary to good health. All of these vitamins are to be found in fresh pasteurized milk, which contains as well the calcium and phosphorus needed for the growth and preservation of the teeth.

Because play and exercise provides the relaxation needed by every child after spending six hours in a school room, as much time as possible should be spent out of doors in the sunshine. Sunshine directly upon the body, not through glass window panes, is the producer of Vitamin D, which is needed to help with the work done by the calcium obtained in fresh pasteurized milk.

Plenty of sleep in a room with an open window is needed for every growing boy and girl. For little tots about twelve hours every night, for children in the elementary grades about ten or eleven hours, and for high school students at least nine hours are required.

Due, perhaps, to the amount of advertising done in magazines and over the radio, the need for personal cleanliness is being forcibly brought home to everyone. Modern improvements in sanitation and hygienic convenience in the home are making the matter of keeping oneself clean a relatively simple one. However, the close proximity of children in school and on the playground makes doubly important the necessity for washing the hands frequently, bathing daily, shampooing the hair weekly, and brushing the teeth at least twice a day.

STRESSES BUSINESS USE OF TELEPHONE

Magazine Writer Notes Efficient Practices Which Help in Daily Contact With Others by Wire

The subject of telephone conversations is given considerable attention in a recent issue of the magazine System and Business Management.

"A really good business man or woman," says the article, "knows how to use the telephone properly. Just notice how your best executive uses his telephone and note the difference. He does not answer his ring by a fatuous 'Hello.' He says—'Sales Department, Jones speaking,' in a decent, courteous manner, and from this point on carries on his conversation in a normal and courteous tone.

"He always assumes that the other party's time is as valuable as his own and consequently does not unduly prolong his conversation. On the other hand, he is never short to the point of brusqueness—simply business-like. He never quarrels or argues over a telephone."

The writer enumerates a number of rules which will help business people in the use of the telephone, such as the necessity of being absolutely sure that the right number is given, to give complete information in answering a call, to be courteous, to speak clearly, to take notes while talking if necessary, and to give undivided attention to the conversation.

Another point often ignored, says the author of the article, is that telephone conversations in offices are usually overheard by one's associates, and the impression of one's ability can be made or marred by the manner in which he or she represents the organization in the handling of telephone conversations.

ANSWERING A TELEPHONE—Charleston, S. C., News & Courier
Telephone manners are acquired. It is easy to acquire them. If a telephone user would have his calls answered promptly, he should be at pains always to answer promptly himself. Some telephone users fuss when they are kept waiting, but let their own bell ring two or more times before picking up the receiver. Some telephone users tell a subordinate to call Bill Smith, and Bill Smith hangs to the other end until the great man begins to talk. A person who does this is without regard for the value of the other man's time. Delay in answering a telephone call is bad manners.

TELEPHONE HAS CHANGED STANDARDS, SAYS WRITER

Says a recent issue of the magazine Commerce, in the course of an article on communication service in this country:

"With all its monopolistic character, the telephone has been the most democratic of all blessings because it has connected and made neighbors of towns, states and nations, it has broadened the lives of millions upon millions of people, it has furnished employment to armies of workers, it has been the sustenance of a branch of science enriching our standard of living, and its profits have been open to anybody who chose to share them. It has been the means of simplifying and expediting the growth of all other business by the facility with which it has made individuals accessible to all other individuals. It has changed the standards of acquaintance, friendship and communion between men."

LIGHTS ON SWITCHBOARD GAVE FIRE WARNING

A telephone in the Melrose, Mass., Y. M. C. A. building served as a fire alarm one night recently when two glowing lights appeared on the switchboard of the local telephone exchange. A fire had started in the basement and had burned the telephone wires, thereby flashing the usual signal to the telephone central office. An alert operator notified the authorities that something was wrong, with the result that the damage from the flames was confined to the cellar.

SMITHS LEAD IN LONDON'S TELEPHONE DIRECTORY

The Smiths lead in London's new telephone directory, with 3,450 listings. Next come the Joneses, but they have only 1,700 entries. If the Davises and the Davieses were classed together, they would take second place with 2,000 listings.

To Greet the New Year

NEW YEAR'S EVE is the time of good resolutions. This coming year, we resolve, we will do this and that which we have hitherto neglected, and we will be careful not to do a number of things which we have always known that we shouldn't but somehow simply couldn't resist. It's lots of fun at a New Year's Eve party to play Good Resolutions. This is done by distributing slips of paper to every guest present and getting them to write down, without any signature, a list of the things which they have resolved to do and not to do during the coming year. Then the hostess reads aloud the lists of good resolutions, and the guests try to guess who is the author of each.

The resolutions come out in funny fashion, and are most revealing. The guests who resolve "to diet," "not to flirt," "not to smoke so much," "to take more exercise," "to go to church more regularly," "to do some good reading," "to save some money" are generally the first to deny vehemently their authorship of any such idea. But their blushes or self-consciousness betray them, or else the others' knowledge of their characters, and this game is good for many a laugh.

A Good Resolution

One of the best resolutions you can make at such a party, however, especially if you are the hostess, is to serve a supper which will appeal to your merry guests. Here's a menu for eight which has been tried and tested, and voted a complete success:

Cream of Mushroom Soup
Toasted Whole Wheat Fingers
Lobster Cutlets
Creamed Peas in Timbale Cases
Sweet Pickled Pear Salad
Coffee Cocomanut Cream
Nuts
Coffee

Cream of Mushroom Soup: Drain the mushrooms from an 8-ounce can, and put them through a grinder. Cook in top part of double boiler for five minutes with one tablespoon water, one tablespoon lemon juice and two teaspoons salt. Make a white sauce of four tablespoons butter, four tablespoons flour and three cups milk. Add the mushrooms and one cup cream, and keep hot in double boiler.

Fish and Fruit

Lobster Cutlets: Make a thick white sauce of two tablespoons butter, four tablespoons flour, one cup milk, one-half teaspoon salt and one-eighth teaspoon pepper. Add one egg yolk, one teaspoon lemon juice and the minced contents of two cans of lobster, and let stand over night or until quite cold. Shape into cutlet or chop shapes, dip in crumbs, then in egg, and then in crumbs again, and fry in deep fat. Insert a piece of macaroni in the pointed ends to represent a bone. Serve with tartar sauce.

Sweet Pickled Pear Salad: Arrange eight pickled pear halves on individual lettuce nests. Garnish with one-half cup whipped heavy cream, one-half cup mayonnaise and one-half cup sweet pickle syrup.

A Corking Dessert

Coffee Cocomanut Cream: Soak three-fourths tablespoon gelatin in four tablespoons cold water. Make a custard of one egg yolk, one-half cup brown sugar and three-fourths cup hot strong coffee. Add one tablespoon butter, pour over the gelatin, and stir until dissolved. Cool. When it begins to set, fold in one stiffly-beaten egg white, one-half cup whipped heavy cream and one can of moist cocomanut. Serve very cold piled in glasses with whipped cream on top.

After this supper you'll find that your guests are feeling stronger, but that their good resolutions have grown unaccountably weaker. That one about dieting, for instance, may be a little bit modified, and the girls look so pretty and the men so handsome that a trifle of flirting doesn't seem so heinous a crime. It's fun to play Good Resolutions both before and after supper, and to note the changes in them that the good food and the merry time have wrought. It's the last chance to change them, you know, before the bells begin ringing at midnight, and your party welcomes the New Year.*

one onion, sliced, and one small apple, chopped, and cook a few minutes longer, but not browning. Add one tablespoon curry powder, and dust with salt. Add the contents of two 12-ounce cans tomato juice and three cups water, and cook slowly until meat is tender. This will take about one hour and a half. Remove meat to serving platter. Strain the liquor, then thicken slightly with a little flour (about one and a half tablespoons) smoothed with a little water. Add two tablespoons chopped chutney and pour over the lamb. TRIM SLIP HAS SPECIAL POINTS

Even under the sheerest frock this slip should prove sufficient unto itself, for it's designed with two full, back skirts so as to be absolutely shadow-proof. The shoulder straps are cut in one piece with the bodice to prevent them from slipping at the shoulders. The darts under the arms give comfortable fullness over the bust. And with the skirt opening from below the hips to the hem at the back there should be no split seams to trouble you after a few weeks' wear. It's a lovely design for satin or heavy crepe, and if you would like something a little more feminine, why not add lace edging at the hem and the neckline?

Pattern 2053 is available in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, and 48. Size 34 takes 3 3/4 yards 39 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth Street, New York City.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

Washington.—It will be remembered that prior to America's entrance into the World war, the then President Woodrow Wilson pursued an announced policy of "watchful waiting."

We are seeing a simulation of that course at present although the country is at peace and not at war. The policy of watchful waiting, adopted by President Roosevelt, has reference not to international relations but to domestic affairs. To be specific, it relates solely to the political situation in the new congress. The President is confronted, as everyone knows, with a huge bloc of extremely radical members in the house and senate and he has his hands full in compelling the congress to rubber stamp administration legislation.

Recent developments, White House pronouncements and other straws tending to show which way the wind blows indicate definitely that Mr. Roosevelt is going to avoid open clashes as far as possible. He is not going to test the mettle of the radical group too far without being sure of his ground.

Therefore, we may expect to see considerable delay in enactment of new banking legislation and in dealing with highly controversial questions centering in section 7 (a) of the national recovery act. Likewise, there will be hesitancy on the part of the administration to push forward a program of revision for the Agricultural adjustment administration and the policy of waiting may be expected to be disclosed in some other phases of legislation such as the unemployment insurance scheme.

I do not mean to convey the impression that there will be an entire absence of bills—some of them already are in the congressional hopper—dealing with these various questions. But definitely, it can be said at this time that the White House is watching congressional developments to determine just how far to the radical side it must go in order to avoid a wide open split between the ultra-radicals and the New Deal contingent. Just where the conservatives will figure in this picture is yet too early to determine except that certainly they can prove themselves to be thorns in the sides of the Democratic leaders at most inopportune times.

Toughest of Questions

To better indicate problems confronting the President with respect to his relationship with congress, it is necessary only to call attention to that most controversial of all questions—section 7 (a) of the recovery act. This provision has had numerous interpretations placed upon it and its effect generally has been to assist the international unions in strengthening their organizations throughout American industry. Section 7 (a) specifies, in effect, that the union in any factory having the most votes speaks for all of the employees in their dealings with the plant management. This provision is what the American Federation of Labor describes as collective bargaining. It has resulted in many cases in disruption of the so-called company unions, organizations having no affiliation with any other union but usually fostered by the corporation of which the workers are employees.

The consensus among unbiased observers here seems to be that the Federation of Labor overplayed its hand last winter in enforcing such a far-reaching interpretation of section 7 (a) as to give the larger union the voice of all employees. At that time NRA, with Donald R. Richberg guiding the policy, committed itself definitely in favor of such a construction. Current developments are generally accepted as showing that either the NRA administration or union labor failed to look far enough into the future to foresee the reaction that is now taking place.

As a matter of fact, tremendous pressure is being exerted on individual members of the house and senate for a revision of this section, and something will come of it before congress adjourns. Of course, when union labor acts in concert, it usually turns the gizzards of politicians very white from fear, but in the present instance, the politicians are torn between the devil and the deep blue sea.

Industrialists after all, are the boys who usually contribute to campaign funds. The politicians do not dare ignore that segment of political strength, either. Consequently, it is apparent now that there will be an attempt to rewrite section 7 (a) in a manner that will eliminate its ambiguities and take away from Mr. Richberg, now the policy director of NRA, the authority to do so much interpreting.

At the same time, the President has a problem of some consequence on his hands in the AAA. Chester Davis, the administrator, is generally regarded among Washington observers as a man with both feet on the ground. Such is not their view, however, with respect to some of the other individuals in the department.

Take H. R. Tolley, for example. Mr.

Tolley has the title of director of planning for the Agricultural Adjustment administration. His relationship with Mr. Davis is almost identical with that between Undersecretary Rexford Guy Tugwell and Secretary Wallace of the Department of Agriculture. Mr. Davis is known to lean upon Mr. Tolley, but Tolley and Professor Tugwell do not always see eye to eye. So there is a personnel problem that may or may not become acute.

But as regards the congressional situation Mr. Tolley carries much more water on his shoulders than does Professor Tugwell. Readers will recall efforts made in the last session of congress to "strengthen" the agricultural adjustment act. Professor Tugwell supported those amendments and, having his head out of water, he became the target. Actually, the best information available is that while the voice was that of Tugwell, the hand was the hand of Tolley.

The common gossip now is that Mr. Tolley is presenting, rather preparing, proposals for "strengthening" the act and that he has not taken Mr. Tugwell into his plans. This being true, the suggestion is frequently heard that Mr. Tolley may commit the administration in certain directions toward regimentation of the farmers to an extent which Mr. Roosevelt does not desire to go.

Mr. Tolley is said to favor inclusion of the fruit and berry and specialty crops under federal control. This is believed to come from his California background, but regardless of its root it must be admitted its sponsor is making headway with the plans.

None can tell, however, until the details of the Tolley program are out in the open exactly what congressional reaction will be. Suffice it to say at this time that there are numerous Democrats, important Democrats at that, who do not go along with Tolley or with Tugwell, and the prediction is frequently made that Tolley's name may receive treatment as rough in congressional debate as did the name of Professor Tugwell last winter.

Banking Legislation

With respect to banking legislation radicals and conservatives likewise are at each other's throats, only this fight has become bitter already. Governor Eccles of the Federal Reserve board has been made the target of a vicious attack by Senator Glass of Virginia, recognized everywhere as the outstanding financial authority among Democrats at the Capitol. Senator Glass openly charged Governor Eccles with exceeding his authority in a recent ruling requiring state banks that are not members of the Federal Reserve board to reduce their interest rate paid on time and savings deposits. These banks were reached through the Federal Deposit Insurance corporation of which they are members and with whose regulations they must comply. The Virginia senator holds that the Federal Reserve board under the guidance of Governor Eccles was responsible for this action and he was not careful in tearing off the bark in a letter stating his views. Senator Glass has forced a temporary halt in the order.

While the Eccles-Glass row may be regarded as purely a controversy between two individuals in positions of high authority, it is much more than that. It presages trouble on any banking legislation that goes farther afield than has occurred heretofore because Senator Glass is an unequivocal fighter for retention of the independence of the Federal Reserve system from treasury domination.

It is not difficult to see why Senator Glass fears such policy as the interest rate reduction. He thinks that the Federal Deposit Insurance corporation already has been figuratively swallowed by the treasury and he believes that the administration also desires the treasury to swallow the Federal Reserve board. The next logical step if the latter is accomplished, is for the treasury to seek establishment of a central bank where the currency would be under control of politicians instead of responsive to business needs as it is now with the twelve regional Federal Reserve banks in operation.

Too much attention should not be paid, in the opinion of astute observers here, to the mass of radical bills now flowing through the routine channels of introduction and reference to committees. Some of them, it is true, will become the basis of legislation later on but every house member or senator with an idea drafts it into the form of a bill and presents it in order that at sometime or other his name may be attached to the legislation. But it must be remembered that with the radical strength existing in both houses of congress some of these bills may get further through the legislative mill than they ordinarily would reach. This fact apparently justifies Mr. Roosevelt's waiting policy. But at the same time, I hear, it is subjecting the administration to a fresh outburst of criticism among that segment of the population which would like to know what the administration policy is.

By EDWARD G. ROBINSON
Motion-Picture Star.

"IN MY early barnstorming days of one-night stands, I landed in a small hotel in a New York hamlet. The room was dismal, but I felt fortunate that I could occupy it alone," related Edward G. Robinson, the bad man of the films.

"During the night a queer, cold tingling sensation pervaded my body. There were slight noises in the room, and I attuned my ears to catch what they were.

"This was not the sound of a person moving or breathing. It seemed at first that there were stifled groans, but these subsided and gave way to a sort of gurgling rattle which came intermittently. The hair at the back of my neck bristled and burned.

"About two minutes later this queer rattle ended with what sounded like a gasp of breath and one louder rattle. It seemed to be right close to me, and yet from far away. The last rattle did not give me any better clue, but a new sound had appeared which immediately followed on the last.

"It was a steady drip, drip, drip, like a faucet dripping into a pan of water.

"The continual drip, drip, drip persisted until I thought it would drive me out of my mind. It seemed louder than the other noises.

"Fear overcame me, and as I could not sleep any longer I decided to investigate.

"My clothes were thrown over the chair near the dresser, and I decided to find a match in my trousers pocket to light the gas and dispel once for all this ghastly experience. Accordingly, I began to crawl gingerly out of bed, but no sooner did one foot touch the floor than it landed in a small puddle of warm liquid. Hurriedly, I drew my foot back and huddled myself under the covers.

"It could not have been water, for it seemed to my then sensitive touch to be of a little heavier consistency, and its warmth was unnatural. Instinctively, I felt something supernatural in it, but my rational mind refused to accept it.

"I was too frightened to get out of bed now to search for matches and the gas jet, but I knew where the pool was into which I heard the drip, drip, dripping of whatever it was. With upturned palm, I held my hand over the place. Nothing came from the ceiling, but still the drip, drip, drip kept on.

"For more than an hour this continued, and then the drops seemed to fall seldom, until, at last, they ceased entirely. Sleep came welcome to my almost shattered nerves.

"When I awoke my first thought was of my night's experience. Hastily I looked at the floor where my foot had encountered the warm liquid into which something had dripped for more than an hour, but to my relief the faded carpet was clear and dry.

"Laughing at what I now considered a silly nightmare, I slid out of bed and prepared to dress. But my sheepish smile froze on my face when I saw the foot that had stepped out of the bed during the night.

"It was red with blood, which was now dried by the warmth under the covers.

"Searching for a wound which might have caused it, I could only discover that the skin on my foot was as clear and unscarred as it was the day before.

"Out of the corner of my eye I could see the hotel owner studying me while I ate breakfast downstairs.

"The landlord put on a furtive air, as though he wanted no one to hear him, as he approached me, and told me of an event which happened some ten years before.

"It appears that a man who was later unidentified had passed through the town and taken a night's lodging in that same room in which I had just had my strange experience. No sooner had he gone up to bed than another traveler entered and was given the room adjoining.

"There was no sound of any kind during the night, but the following morning the landlord discovered that the second traveler had departed hurriedly and his bed had not been slept in. It seemed very unusual, as there was no means of transportation out of town during the night.

"The proprietor's curiosity was aroused: he knocked on the door of the first traveler, and when he received no answer boldly opened it and entered.

"The man was sprawled across the bed in his night clothes. His head hung over the side of the bed toward the floor, with his sightless eyes looking at the ceiling. He was therefore plain to see that the man's throat had been slashed by a sharp knife or a razor and through the night his life's blood had dripped onto the carpet near the edge of the bed."

"Baltimore of England"

As the largest city in Essex outside the London area, Colchester is an important farming and shopping center as well as the "Baltimore of England" for sea food. In England, too, Colchester is nearly as noted for its roses as for its oysters. Thousands of beautiful blossoms are raised annually in Colchester nurseries and shipped to London markets.

Get Perfect Quilt With This Design

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

The quilting on a patchwork quilt may make or ruin the entire work, if the design and work is not done neatly. Beauty in the design is necessary, but the needlework and evenness of the stitches bring out the design, and if done right the result will be perfect and always admired. Needleworkers know the best way to transfer a design to cloth is through a perforated pattern. The design is perfectly drawn and perforated so that each stamping is alike and requires very little time. The stamping powder can be brushed off when work is finished, leaving no lines or marks.

Package No. 33B shown above contains seven actual size patterns, perforated on bond paper, also blue powder for stamping and full instructions just how to do it.

Pattern D 12—10 inch Spider Web is suitable for the center of the Wedding Ring Quilt. The outer lines may be omitted if a smaller size is wanted. D 11 is a 4 inch Butterfly Motif suitable for corners. D 10 is a 1 1/2 inch Tulip Border. D 13—5 inch Feather Circle. C 7 a 2 1/2 inch Floral border and corner. C 8—7 1/2 inch Feather Circle. C 9—6 1/2 by 8 inch Pineapple motif. These patterns can be used singly or in combination, and can be used many times. If they interest you, send 15c to our Quilting department, and these seven patterns will be sent you by return mail.

AZTEC MONARCH PIONEER IN THE ART OF GLIDING

Constantly they are discovering new things about the ancient Aztecs. Just the other day it was learned by student research that the early inhabitants of Mexico had invented a very modernized form of football; but even later comes, via Madrid, news of the Aztecs some five hundred years ago.

Discovery of this extraordinary fact was made by a Polish archeologist while delving into ancient records of the Franciscan missionaries. The Pole, Tenenbaum by name, had spent nine years in research in Mexico and, among the monkish documents there, found a description of what might be called an aviation school, conducted five centuries ago by King Netz. Bird worship existed in Mexico as well as in Guatemala and also in the Mayan regions of Yucatan. An interest in flight quite naturally followed and flight, in the native thoughts, connoted feathered wings.

Unable to create power artificially, King Netz and his assistants fell back upon wind power in combination with gravitation. According to the Franciscan manuscripts, Netz insisted that his people should become more like their feathered gods so he began equipping them, and himself, with widespread wings fabricated from storks' feathers. And the monarch, personally showing the way, "used to glide from the heights of the mountains into the deep valleys."

An engraved stone, said to have been discovered by Professor Tenenbaum himself, shows the gliders in action and, most striking fact of all, the Aztec aviators are seen wearing goggles "not greatly unlike those worn today." Professor Tenenbaum recently exhibited his proofs to a scientific body in Madrid, but no doubt further research will follow this opening lead.—New Orleans Times-Picayune.

Soviet Bees Scorn Cold

Bees are humming in the hothouses and hothouses of three state farms situated north of the Polar circle, reports a recent issue of the Moscow News. Oblivious of the sub-Arctic temperature, the bees gathered 16 kilograms of honey per hive in six days, and at the same time, through their activity, eliminated the need of hand pollination of cucumbers. The yield of cucumbers was consequently increased by 50 per cent in the hothouses and 200 per cent in the hotheds. The successful introduction of bee culture to the Far North came on the initiative of Demidenko, director of the beekeeping station of Timiryazev Agricultural academy, who spent three years working on the problem.

Most of us think of Time as the fleeting present, plus the days and years that are to come. This is the reason we lose out. Time is now. It makes little difference what we are going to do some time, but it does matter what we are doing now.—Grit.

103 Eyes for an Eye
The Unexpected Pleases
Fourth Place for Us

Secretary Ickes has a real plan, and possesses what might be called vision in spending. He has confidence in this country and its wealth. As chairman of the resources board, Mr. Ickes favors spending $105,000,000,000 in the next 20 or 30 years on public works.Do not "stand and gaze," or fall backward; that isn't so much money for Uncle Sam. Mr. F. H. Ecker, whose Metropolitan Life Insurance company, biggest in the world, has assets of $4-000,000,000, will tell you that in really good times the United States' income was $90,000,000,000 a year; $60,000,000-000 for wages, $30,000,000,000 of other income."An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" may suit old-fashioned "capitalistic" countries. It does not appeal to Russia. There, to avenge the killing of one man, Kirov, Stalin's friend, 25 more have been shot, making a total of 103."A hundred and three eyes for one eye, a hundred and three teeth for one tooth," is a high price, and the number killed may be increased.The unexpected is interesting and is the essence of humor. Two old gentlemen, falling in their attempt to strike oil, retired to the poorhouse.
In the poorhouse backyard they found,
first, a good coal deposit, then struck oil.Louis Mosenza of New Jersey went hunting deer, walked 20 miles, found nothing. At night he found a large deer hanging in his kitchen. It walked into the front yard, Mrs. Mosenza shot it.Charles Dana Gibson, able artist, with friends went moose hunting, traveled far, by buckboard in the Maine forest, found nothing, packed guns, drove back to the station. A fine bull moose and two cows walked across the track. They could not get out their guns in time.An NRA report says the United States comes fourth among nations in the march toward recovery and is gratified. There was a time when fourth place did not particularly gratify Americans, but "small mercies thankfully received."
